Meeting of the Bar.

the members of the Bar of the Supreme Court, on Wednesday afternoon, on the occasion of the retirement from office of Judges Hartwell and Wulsmann, and the elevation to the seats on the Bench thus vacated, of Judges Harris and Judd.

Jadre Hartwell spoke as follows: My BRETHREN OF THE BAR.—At His Majosty's rear bearmans of the Bar.—At his autory a request, I have resigned the high and most hecorable position which I have been becored with during the last five and a half years, as First Associate Justice of this Court. I came among you a stranger, without experience in judicial duties. In retiring from this place, I desire to state that I am conscious of many faults of manner and that I may frequently have given you annoyance by hasty words or acts. It has been my earnest wish to conduct the Court partially and decurously, and with just regard to the rights and feelings of those who pleaded before me. If I have succeeded in convincing your minds of that fact, I shall be more than satisfied. In the keen professional anxiety to secure the rights which are believed to belong to clients, I know the disappointment which often follows an adverse ruling. But your bearing towards myself both as a Judge and personally, has shown me that I have had your kindly feeling and a large share of your confidence. I wish to thank you most cordially for this I also wish to acknowledge to you my indebtedness for your valuable legal assistance in reaching the correct conclusions of law. It has often been the case, that my own first and even second impressions have been corrected or modified by your suggestions and as I believe, in a way to secure nearer approxi

I retire with deep regret from the doties that I have loved, and from the associations that are en-deared to me by many acts of kindness on your part. His late Majesty Lunalilo. I can sak for my successors no greater happiness than that the same consideration and aid that you have given to me be extended to them.

To my mind there is no more dignified and re-sponsible duty than that of an independent and intelligent counsel. When the mouths of others are closed from fear, doubt or ignorance, he stands forth to plead fearlessly in the cause of law and right You gentlemen are those custodians of the law. You have faithfully performed your duties during my acquaintance with you; and that you may always find success and happiness is my sincere prayer. For the officers of the Court, the Attorney General and his deputy, the Marshal and his deputy, the Clerks and the Interpreter: Gentlemen—Accept my thanks for your kindness to myself personally and officially, and for the faithfulness with which your hanks for your kindness to myself personally and efficially, and for the faithfulness with which your lifecally, and for the faithfulness with which your lifecally duties have been discharged. With the ferent hope that the Department of the Judiciary may liways sustain a high and pure position in the sentiment of the community, I bid you adied.

Court, and Mr. Jones, on behalf of the Bar, spoke eloquently and feelingly in response to the addresses of the retiring Judges. Marshal Parke then read the Commissions from His Majesty the King, appointing Charles

Coffin Harris and Albert Francis Judd to the positions respectively of First and Second Associate Justices of the Supreme Court. Judge Hartwell addressed a few words of welcome to the new Justices, as, shaking hands with the retiring ones, they took their seats on the Mr. Justice Harris then said : GENTLEMEN.-It is a serious thing to undertake to judge on matters affecting the rights, fortunes and lives even of one's fellow men; but we undertake the duty to-day with an humble yet firm reliance upon the guidance of Divine Providence.

Events have precipitated His Majesty's determina tion in selecting his counselors, and in consequence, we are called quite unexpectedly to-day to take seats on this beach.

It will not be surprising to you that at this moment, the whole past of this Court seems passing before me, a past of which, Mr. Montgomery, you Sir, and myself are the only persons connected with the business of the Court left who can speak from changed between us, and the intimate relations which for the last year and a half, have subsisted between us makes it, in my opinion, exceedingly proper that I should address you particularly on this occasion; we have done much important business together, and your assistance has been of the greatest value to me. Your unwexted industry and high professional honor make a client's interest poculiari safe in your hands. I have never known you t eafe in your bands. I have never known you to make a proposition of law which you did not think to be fairly sustainable, or a statement of fact which was not true or which you did not believe to be sus-tained by evidence. These qualities will continue to make your advocacy here as acceptable as your as-sistance to myself in my private business has here-tofure been valuable.

Mr. Stanley, the many favors that have been inter-
